We have a strange conceit in our culture that simply because we have said something, we understand what it means! But often we do not – especially when we speak from a deeper place than intellect or ego, speak the kind of words that arise when the inner teacher of our EI/VBC's® feels safe enough to tell its truth. At those moments, we need to listen to what our lives are saying and take notes on it, lest we forget our own truth or deny that we ever had it.

How can we get into a mental space – stop everything else demanding or enticing our attention – and listen? In what format – with that in mind – should we make notes? What is of value in noting? How can we use it and when? Should we judge the meaning of notes we have jotted as we listen to our inner teacher – as to their value now or should we wait – until when? And why?

Change is possible. But, it can only come when it is rooted in the service of that which you most deeply care about, and not when you are trying to "solve" yourself or your life as if they were problems. When you shift to the orientation of the creative, you move along the path of mastering causality. You become the predominant casual force in your life, which is natural and desirable. This shift is made by invoking senior forces such as:

Consciousness feels like some kind of pattern built with the nonverbal signs of body states. It is for this reason perhaps that the mysterious source of our mental first-person perspective – core consciousness and its simple sense of self – is revealed to the organism in a form that is both powerful and elusive, unmistakable and vague.
